Engaging hard to reach families

1 day course

The phrase ‘hard to reach’ is often used to describe parents who do not engage or access services. Yet services are often commissioned precisely to support these families.

Practitioners need to continuously develop their skills to actively engage parents and build relationships that will support and encourage positive change.

An effective worker will need a selection of methods and strategies to effectively engage families so that their engagement is as unique as the family itself.

Who should attend this course?

Any person working in the field of children and families whose role entails case work, assessments and/or home visiting or engaging with families.

What will you achieve?

This course will provide participants with a comprehensive understanding of the key skills and abilities needed to engage with hard to reach families through discussion, reflective practice, and evidence-based practice.

By the end of the day participants will:

- Be able to identify their own key skills in engaging with hard to reach families
- Have an increased knowledge of effective methods to engage with hard to reach families
- Have better awareness of the impact of their own emotions and behaviour and be more effective in their approach.
- Have increased awareness of looking after oneself whilst engaging with hard to reach families.
Course delivery

This course is delivered on request, for up to 16 participants, at a location of your choice.

Please discuss any particular requirements with us as this course can be tailored to meet your specific needs.

Cost

This one day training course costs £750 for up to 16 participants.

Venue and catering (if required) and travel and subsistence are charged separately.

Contact us

For more information about this training course or any other Family Action services please contact us on:

T&C@family-action.org.uk

020 3640 2303

www.family-action.org.uk